Title: Virtual Front Counter for Online Criminal Record Checks

Objective: Virtual Front Counter , Powered by BackCheck, is an online order and delivery system for criminal records checks which includes identity verification, online consent, and secure forgery proof delivery of results to both citizens and organizations, eliminating the need for line-ups in your lobby.

In this session, police executives will see how they can enhance customer service to their citizens using proven technology, generate faster turnaround times, and meet citizens' expectations to interact online with service providers. Police executives will see workflow management tools and tips to significantly reduce the costs and human resource demands associated with the otherwise labour-intensive process to deliver volunteer or employment criminal record checks. Also, police executives will see how they can maintain control over the content of the results being transmitted to citizens and do so within a secure web-based environment that can even be customized with your police service's logo.

With advances in technology sustainable revenue streams for police services can be created, while decreasing overhead costs. By leveraging BackCheck's strategic relationship with Canada Post, police executives can substantially minimize foot traffic in their lobby and deliver a fast and simple process to citizens. Virtual Front Counter technology will produce clear and measurable benefits for a) the police service, b) the citizen and c) the organizations or employers requiring the criminal record checks.

Title: Cops Count—Police Matter

Objective: Throughout his career, Bill Bratton has insisted that “Cops Count—Police Matter.” And this has never been more true than it is today! The former Commissioner of NYPD and Chief of LAPD—and now Altegrity Risk International Chairman—will discuss the importance of creating secure communities as a foundation for secure nations and the critical “front line” role that law enforcement plays in this process.

Mr. Bratton has demonstrated through his actions and frequently cited the importance of forging a new optimistic consensus that in a democracy, law enforcement at all levels—from national government to local police departments—must accept responsibility for crime, fear, and disorder and do everything in their power to ensure safety and civility. During his remarks, he will provide examples of how this can be accomplished, as well as discuss how he used CompStat, the internationally acclaimed command accountability system he put in place while serving in New York City, to revolutionize policing and prevent crime.

Based on experiences from his current work as leader of a major international security solutions company, Mr. Bratton will also share his thoughts about why policing and rule of law fundamentals must be a central element of any realistic plan to assist troubled nations and emerging democracies. He believes this is the critical path to furthering the goals of international security, combating terrorism, and improving overall security in our communities—Homeland Security is Community Security.

Title: Information Sharing Between Law Enforcement Agencies: Using Technology to Get Way Past the Obstacles

Objective: Everyone understands how important it is for law enforcement agencies to share information. Still, citing one obstacle or another, law enforcement agencies have been either unwilling or unable to share information in any regularized and systemic fashion. Major among obstacles commonly cited are protection of privacy issues, information accuracy and associated liability issues, and costs. However, the technology is now here to help deal with these issues effectively - law enforcement agencies simply need to start using it. This presentation will discuss that technology, referring to research and experiences which demonstrate its capacity.

This presentation will...

1. Highlight exactly what the technology is capable of doing.
2. Provide evidence of that capability.
3. Raise the question as to why this technology is not already more widely used.

Title: Social Media "What are we afraid of?"
"What is it & who is using it?"

Objective: Recent and worldwide media accounts regarding the use of social media by police and first response crisis managers are having an impact on the communities your agency polices and discussions are occurring whether you want them to or not. Why not be a part of that crucial and potentially trust building conversation? In this presentation you will be given an introduction of not only what Social Media is but you will also learn via The Canadian Association of Police on Social Media's research exactly what methods, tools and communication styles policing agencies and officers are currently utilizing within social media in the United States, United Kingdom and Canada. What are you afraid of? Join us for this need to know and informative talk specifically designed for the new to or thinking about using social media police audience. Without this knowledge, your agency runs the risk of wasting precious time, money and resources drafting communication and intelligence strategies that will all together miss where your communities are spending more and more of their time. There is nothing to be afraid of and this presentation will help you decide via factual analysis if your agency has a place for social media from the top brass right down to street based operations.
